Example

```
[user@localhost] $ git reset HEAD^ -- unwanted.txt
[user@localhost] $ git commit --amend
 1 file changed, 3 insertions(+), 1 deletion(-)
```

Now let's check the `log`:

Example

```
[user@localhost] $ git log --oneline
07c5bc5 (HEAD -> master) Adding plines to reddme
9a9add8 (origin/master) Added .gitignore
81912ba Corrected spelling error
3fdaa5b Merge pull request #1 from w3schools-test/updat
836e5bf (origin/update-readme, update-readme) Updated r daf4f7c (origin/html-skeleton, html-skeleton) Updated i facaeae (gh-page/master) Merge branch 'master' of https e7de78f Updated index.html. Resized image 5a04b6f Updated README.md with a line about focus d29d69f Updated README.md with a line about GitHub
e0b6038 merged with hello-world-images after fixing cor 1f1584e added new image
dfa79db updated index.html with emergency fix
0312c55 Added image to Hello World
09f4acd Updated index.html with a new line
221ec6e First release of Hello World!
```

Oh no! the `commit` message is full of spelling errors.

Embarrassing. Let's `amend` that:

```
[master eaa69ce] Added lines to README.md
 Date: Thu Apr 22 12:18:52 2021 +0200
 1 file changed, 3 insertions(+), 1 deletion(-))
```

And re-check the `log`:

Example

```
[user@localhost] $ git log --oneline
eaa69ce (HEAD -> master) Added lines to README.md
9a9add8 (origin/master) Added .gitignore
81912ba Corrected spelling error

0312c55 Added image to Hello World
09f4acd Updated index.html with a new line
221ec6e First release of Hello World!
```

We see the previous `commit` is replaced with our amended one!

Warning: Messing with the `commit` history of a repository can be dangerous.

It is usually ok to make these kinds of changes to your own local repository.

Git Amend Files

Adding files with `--amend` works the same way as above.

Just add them to the `staging environment` before committing.
